

Sterling N. Ransone, Jr, MD, FAAFP, is a board-certified Family Physician who practices full-spectrum rural Family Medicine on the shores of the Chesapeake Bay in Deltaville, Virginia.

He graduated from the College of William and Mary and the Medical College of Virginia, then completed his residency at the Riverside Family Medicine Residency Program, serving as chief resident.

A third-generation family physician, Dr. Ransone returned to the area in which he was reared to serve the people of his community.

He has served the community of medicine in numerous capacities and has held leadership positions in national, state, and local organizations, most recently as President and Board Chair of the American Academy of Family Physicians.

He has also served as President of the Medical Society of Virginia and the Virginia Academy of Family Physicians.

Sterling grew up filing charts and scrubbing floors at the solo general practice of his father and is currently practicing as an employed physician in a large health care system. beside his wife Karen Ransone, MD, FAAP, a pediatrician and former President of the Virginia Board of Medicine. He has three children, the oldest of which, Elizabeth, just completed medical school and started her internship at Thomas Jefferson Hospital in Philadelphia.